

University of Virginia School of Medicine is seeking an Emergency Medical Services (EMS) faculty member within the Department of Emergency Medicine to contribute to a well-established and nationally recognized academic EMS program.

This role focuses on providing high-quality clinical care in both UVA Health's Emergency Department and its prehospital settings while supporting UVA's mission in education, research, and community engagement. The EMS faculty member will work collaboratively with departmental colleagues, regional EMS agencies, and community partners to advance prehospital care, disaster preparedness, and patient outcomes across the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Responsibilities include serving as an attending physician within the Emergency Department, teaching and mentoring learners at multiple levels, participating in EMS-related research and innovation, and contributing to the development of evidence-based, data-informed approaches to prehospital and emergency care.